CLASS COMMITTEE.

*JOSEPH LYMAN. RUFUS WILLIAM NASON.
JAMES MONROE OLMSTEAD.

CLASS SECRETARY.

ARTHUR LOVELL WARE.

ASSISTANT CLASS SECRETARY.

JAMES AUGUSTUS BEATLEY.

The Fourth Triennial Report is herewith submitted to the Class.

The Secretary has received no answer to his circular from forty members of the Class. In view of this evident lack of interest in the Class organization on the part of so many men, — and, further, from the fact that two-thirds of those acknowledging the circular report "No change since 1883;" "Nothing new to add to former report," — the issue of a Triennial Report seems a useless expenditure of time and money. It is a difficult task to attempt to compile a satisfactory report under such circumstances; and the Secretary urges the substitution of a Quinquennial for the usual Triennial issue.

Since the publication of the Third Triennial in 1883, two deaths have occurred in the Class: Joseph Lyman, of typhoid-fever at Northampton, Mass., Sept. 6, 1883; and Winthrop Miller, at Minneapolis, Oct. 16, 1884.

Class Meetings.

JUNE 26, 1883.

THE Third Triennial dinner of the Class was held this evening at the American House, in Boston. The Secretary presided, and read the Class Report. Subsequently songs were sung by Otis, Barker, Willson, Beatley, J. Lyman, and Ware; and remarks were made by Macvane, Laughlin, G. H. Johnson, Willson, M. H. Richardson, Shaw, Bryant, and Purrington. The gift of Mrs. Z. E. Spring to the Class Fund had been expended in flowers in memory of her late son, Edward Evans Spring; and it was voted to communicate that fact to the donor. It was also voted to inform the family of the late Robert Dickey that his memory had been appropriately observed at the dinner. A telegram of congratulation was received from the Class of 1873 at Yale, at that time dining in New Haven; and Tarbell and Warren were appointed a committee to acknowledge the same. A telegram was also received from Nelson. Fifty members of the Class were present, and the exercises concluded at midnight.

ARTHUR L. WARE, Class Secretary.

COMMENCEMENT, June 27, 1883.

A meeting of the Class was held to-day at Holworthy 6.

The resignation of the Secretary was tendered, but was not accepted by the Class. A vote was passed empowering the Secretary to appoint an Assistant Secretary, who should aid him in the discharge of his duties. Beatley was subsequently appointed to this office.

Remarks were made by Washburn, who proposed the erection of a Class memorial window in Memorial Hall. After some debate, it was voted to refer the matter to a committee to be appointed by the Secretary, said committee to consist of the Secretary, Assistant Secretary ex officio, and three others, who should report at the next Commencement. The Secretary accordingly appointed Washburn, A. D. Foster, and Prince.

Adjourned. ARTHUR L. WARE, Class Secretary.

SEPT. 14, 1883.

At a meeting of the Class to-day, at Parker's, to take action upon the death of Joseph Lyman, the following resolutions, prepared by Mr. Robert Grant, were unanimously adopted: —

Whereas we have met together to express our sense of the loss we have suffered in the death of our classmate, Joseph Lyman, it is resolved, —

That we recall to-day the many noble traits of character which endeared him to us in our college days; his independence, manliness, and unswerving devotion to truth and integrity.

That those of us who have known and loved him in later years, desire to record our admiration of the pure and upright living that has graced his manhood, and to deplore the loss of a life so full of service to humanity, and precious to his friends.

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to his family, with our respectful sympathy.

JAMES A. BEATLEY, Asst. Class Secretary.

COMMENCEMENT, June 25, 1884.

A meeting of the Class was held to-day at Holworthy 6.

The minutes of the last meeting having been read and accepted, the Committee on the Memorial Window made its report through Washburn, to the effect that a space for a window in Memorial Hall could be secured. A discussion upon the matter followed, and White finally moved that it be laid on the table. Carried. It was further voted, that the regular Triennial Report and Dinner be prepared for next year, and that those present at the dinner be assessed therefor in case the Class Fund should fail to cover the cost. The resolutions passed by the Class upon the death of Joseph Lyman were then read.

Adjourned.

JOSEPH LYMAN.

Died of typhoid-fever at Northampton, Mass., Sept. 6, 1883.

In Greenwood Cemetery at Brooklyn stands a plain stone with the inscription, —

Joseph Lyman, Born Oct. 11, 1851; Died Sept. 6, 1883.

In Brooklyn, the place of his birth, Joseph Lyman received his early education, taking the full course of the Polytechnic Institute of that city. In November, 1867, he went abroad with his family, visiting England, France, Italy, Germany, and Switzerland, returning home in September, 1868. But for the intervention of this journey, it is probable that he might have entered the class of 1871; but fortunately, we may say, his entrance was accordingly deferred: and, after studying about a year with a private tutor, he was matriculated in 1869 as a member of the class of 1873.

During his first two years he occupied apartments at Mr. J. M. Howe's, on the corner of Garden Street and Appian Way, rooming for the remainder of the time at No. 32 Holyoke House. As a student his general record was creditable, and he distinguished himself in the natural sciences. During a summer vacation, together with Gunn, Shepley, and others, he took part in Professor Shaler's wagon-trip through the Middle States into Virginia. Possessed of considerable skill with the pencil, and interesting himself much in artistic studies, the present courses in the fine arts would have found in him a constant and appreciative attendant. The "programmes" of the Hasty Pudding Club will bear witness to his dexterity in designing. Other societies with which he was connected were the Everett Athenæum, the O. K., the Natural History Society, and the Psi Upsilon Fraternity. He was also an editor of "The Harvard Advocate." In athletics his interests were principally aquatic. In later years he continued to pass many leisure hours, either in the saddle, or upon the water in canoeing or yachting.

After graduation he went abroad in July, 1873, proceeding directly to Germany. The writer met him at the Vienna Exposition held in that year, and afterwards passed in his company at Brunswick, where Elisha Gunn of '73 was also a resident, two delightful months in the midst of genuinely Teutonic surroundings. In December, 1873, he returned to America, and immediately began his commercial career in the firm of A. A. Low & Bros. of New York, in which his father, Mr. E. H. R. Lyman, was a partner. The interests of the house were chiefly in the East-India and China trade. A few years later he became himself one of the firm, a position which he held until his death. He was also a member of the Chamber of Commerce, the University Club of New York, and other organizations. His last illness was of brief duration, — a stomach-trouble which passed into typhoid-fever, proving quickly fatal. His death took place at his father's country-seat in Northampton, Mass. Of his classmates, only Maurice Richardson, Frank Shepley, and Arthur Ware were able to be present at his funeral.

The career of Joseph Lyman was that of the simple, self-respecting Christian gentleman, imbued with a deep sense of responsibility and duty, chary in the expression of his devotion to principle, but illustrating his faith by the daily act.

As a merchant he represented the best tendencies of commercial life, not blind to the deviousness of business, but maintaining with unswerving integrity the struggle of the solvent against the insolvent, worthily continuing the traditions of a long-established and conservative house, and destined himself to have become, by right of personal merit and ability, a strong pillar of the Commonwealth.

His relations to his family, to society, and to the church, presented the same consistent quality of affectionate fidelity, of kindly regard for his associates, and a cheerful and active co-operation in works of practical piety.

As a friend he was stanch and devoted, blending admirably frankness and reserve, cloaking sometimes a fine delicacy of feeling in a semblance of reticence, which, to those less familiar with his character, might have seemed indifference or pride, yet sparing not the timely word of advice or censure, proving fully the truth of the saying, "Faithful are the wounds of a friend."

We may allude but briefly here to the personal bereavement caused by the loss of a friendship whose roots are in the past, twined about those recollections of youth and early manhood when life is at its freshest, and when hopes are highest, and whose fair growth is arrested while it is approaching a fruitful and generous maturity. With this grievous experience we are all taught to be sadly familiar, and must feel that to ourselves life is poorer by each loss which is so suffered, and that the world is poorer by each loss of a true and manly nature which it sustains.

But, while the individual affliction often is inevitably irreparable, it must be natural and well that the pulse of the world does not beat more slowly, that fresh life constantly succeeds as we surely tend towards the "one far-off divine event." And, as our friend was of a noble type, we shall rejoice to claim him, and shall cherish his memory as one whose life was sincere and right.
